// Reforestando

Reforestando is an artistic project of mural interventions that functions as an expanded public herbarium, disseminating large-scale botanical imagery across the territory.

Its core focus is in the representation of native wild plants, elevating them to a human visual scale to amplify their presence in our collective imagination. The project merges art, botanical dissemination and a pursuit of reconnection with the living beings that cohabit our planet.

Each mural is the result of rigorous research into local flora, prioritizing endemic species, those in danger, or those with a significant cultural link to the community (through medicinal, nutritional, or symbolic uses). This criterion is combined with a careful consideration of visual aesthetics: the shapes, colors and structures of leaves, flowers, and fruits are chosen to create a dialogue with the specific architecture and surrounding environment.

The style approaches botanical illustration, with anatomical precision that allows for species identification, transforming each piece into both an artistic record and an act of visibility for the plant kingdom.
